When I see Anjali on TV, I often smile to myself. Was this little cute kid me? I learnt Bharatanatyam for five years, and gave up. At that point of time, schooling was a lot more fun. RBI sees economy growth clipping at 7.3 percent in current fiscal year

MUMBAI(KCN): The Reserve Bank today said the ongoing accelerated reform initiatives like this year down from 3.5 per cent in 2016-17, increasing public capex and support to poorer households, at 7.3 per cent in 2017-18," the FSR said.

On inflation, it paints a rosy picture

4.3 per cent in April and 4.2 per cent in May 2017, largely reflecting the impact of decline in global based fiscal discipline is commendable, there are a few issues that need attention. One is the deterioration in the states' fiscal conditions and the other is increased leverage of public sector undertakings.

"In the case of states, there is an increasing tendency to borrow outside the budget through parastatals as these are non-transparent in the sense that they do not add to outstanding debt even though their servicing burden falls on the budget," the report warned.

At the same time, in absolute and relative terms the size of net market borrowings of the states has been rising sharply, though their market liquidity has not improved commensurately, it maintained.

"This has implications for the further development of secondary market in government bonds, besides periodic redemption pressures," the FSR added.

GST and continuing political stability will push the economic growth scale to 7.3 per cent in terms of GVA in the current fiscal year.

The Financial Stability Report 2017, released today, bases its optimism to the lower fiscal deficit at 3.2 per cent for small businesses and the rural sector, to oil the economy.

"Going forward, reforms in FDI and real estate sector, implementation of GST, and revival in external demand are likely to contribute to a better growth outlook. GVA growth is expected to be higher and projects CPI inflation to be in the range of 2-3.5 per cent in the first half of the year and 3.5-4.5 per cent in the second half.

Retail inflation, excluding food and fuel that remained sticky during H2 of FY17 at around 4.9 per cent, dipped to crude oil prices on transport and communication and moderate price pressures in services.

While noting that the fiscal conditions of the Centre is on the mend, it expressed concerns on that of the States. "While the Centre's commitment to returning to rule

The defence minister said the Bhutan government had made its stance clear and China was trying to alter the status quo in the area.

"I think after this the issue has become very clear," Jaitley said.

The genesis of the flashpoint was China's attempts to build a road in the strategically key area of Donglong. Its link to the Sikkim-Bhutan-Tibet tri-junction could give China a major military advantage over India. The Indian Army had blocked construction of the road by China in Donglong, a disputed territory between China and Bhutan.

LNG price row between India, US tightens Trump's export aims

NEW DELHI(KCN): India's biggest importer of U.S. liquefied natural gas (LNG) is trying to renegotiate prices with the U.S. seller, sources said, undermining plans by U.S. President Donald Trump to export more gas to the fast-growing Asian nation.

At a joint news conference with Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi at the White House this week, Trump said the United States looked forward to exporting more energy, including new major long-term contracts to purchase American natu-

India) is not very attractive," said one of the sources on condition of anonymity, as he was not cleared to speak to media. Neither source gave any details on what price GAIL was seeking.

"We are trying a mix of options on pricing, and re-negotiating is one of them," the source said. "My perception is that the talks with Cheniere in this regard are not very likely to succeed."

Officially, GAIL has declined comment on the row.

Cheniere, currently the only U.S. company exporting

LNG, India's biggest gas importer, told Reuters that at current oil prices, long-term gas contracts were being offered at $6-7 per mmBtu.

Mangesh Patankar, head of business development at energy consultancy Galway Group, said that GAIL was trying for lower prices because the company was struggling to sell contracted U.S. LNG on to end-users in India, who are demanding cheaper gas from GAIL themselves.

"A lot of the (LNG) buyers are doing that right now.

The effort is part of Trump's policy of seeking to assert power abroad through a boost in natural gas, coal and petroleum exports. He said on Thursday that the "golden era" of the U.S. energy business was now underway.

But any new LNG agreements with India will depend on how GAIL and Cheniere of the United States deal with a long-term supply contract signed in 2011 for an estimated $22 billion.

India's GAIL has deals to buy 5.8 million tonnes of U.S. LNG per annum for 20 years, mostly with Cheniere, but is now asking to re-negotiate the price. A commissioning cargo was sent last year, but supplies in earnest will only likely start in 2018.

Two sources at state-run GAIL said they were trying to re-negotiate the contract.

"At current U.S. prices, the landed cost of the LNG (in LNG, said it was not open to a lower price.

"Our customers expect us to deliver on our commitments, and we expect the same. This is a signed long-term contract that we believe will provide long-term value and we expect the contract to be adhered to," said Eben Burnham-Snyder, a spokesman at Cheniere.

The contract price is calculated on a formula based on U.S. spot prices for natural gas, and currently, costs India $8.50 per million British thermal units (mmBtu).

Traders said that Cheniere would struggle to send cargoes at a lower price.

GAIL under pressure

Asian spot LNG prices, which exclude all extra costs like shipping, have fallen by more than 40 percent this year to $5.40 per mmBtu amid ballooning oversupply as production from Australia and the United States rises.

R.K. Garg, head of finance at Petronet

With the ramp up in Australia and U.S. volumes, and demand being not that active in the end-user market, a lot of the buyers have had to do that," he said.

Other LNG buyers, including top importer Japan, are also pressing for better terms.

Washington has been using LNG as a diplomatic and political tool. Although sales are a commercial matter, Washington has been laying foundations for contracts with key buyers, including China.

Trump has made LNG exports a central part of his trade policy, aimed at reviving industry and creating jobs. Asian markets account for about 70 percent of global LNG shipments, and India is one of the fastest-growing importers.

Trump will be visiting Poland next week and plans to promote U.S. LNG exports at a meeting in Warsaw with a dozen leaders from central and eastern Europe.
