General Bipin Rawat cremated with full military honours, daughters perform last rites

NEW DELHI(KCN): The nation on Friday bid farewell to Chief of Defence Staff (CDS) General Bipin Rawat who, along with his wife and 11 armed forces personnel, died in an IAF chopper crash near Coonoor in Tamil Nadu on Wednesday.

General Rawat was cremated with full military honours with a 17-gun salute as per laid down protocols. Post the playing of the 'Last Post' and 'Rouse' by the tri-services buglers, the funeral pyre was lit by his two daughters, General Rawat, 63, his wife Madhulika Rawat, and 11 other defence personnel were killed when a Mi17V5 helicopter carrying them crashed near Coonoor in Tamil Nadu on Wednesday. Group Captain Varun Singh is the lone survivor and his condition remains critical but stable.

A gun salute is a formal way to honour a dignitary and it varies as per the individual's position, rank and hierarchy. It is performed by firing cannons or artillery. A 21-gun salute, the highest, is fired for heads of state and government. The number decreases with the rank of the recipient of the honour.

The Founding Fathers, by incorporating Articles 226 and 32, reintroduced the dual system of administration of justice which was abolished in England in 1875, having proved to be counterproductive

Mathews J Nedumpara

Common people, often reassured by news reports where the High Courts under Article 226 and even the Supreme Court under Article 32 come to the rescue of common people who are denied justice by the government and its instrumentalities, are granted instant and hustle free justice institute writ petitions when they face similar injustice. Except for a few High Courts like that of Kerala where relief under the writ jurisdiction is granted without being confronted by questions as to the maintainability of the petition for the petitioner not having exhausted the "alternative remedies", realise that reality is different from perception. In High Courts like the Bombay HC, Delhi HC, even Madras, Punjab & Haryana HC and Gujarat HC, of which I am fairly familiar, majority of the writ petitions are dismissed in limine on the ground of non-exhaustion of alternative remedy.

I have often found lawyers, instead of advising their client to institute a civil suit, for the Civil Court is the court of plenary jurisdiction, competent, empowered and duty bound to adjudicate any dispute under the sun of a civil nature, unless barred, or where forums like the DRT, NCLT, Provident fund tribunal, etc. are created in substitution of the Civil Court, challenge the order of the HC in the Supreme Court under Article 136. Such SLPs are dismissed by one-line orders. This exercise would cost the litigant enormously, and many would give up their pursuit for justice. The few who still place hope in the judiciary would then institute a suit or approach the forum created in substitution of the Civil Court. Their plea for interim injunction or other protective orders are rejected on the premise that their plea before the High Court and SC was lost. The fact that the High Court or SC did not adjudicate the case and, therefore, there is no bar of res judicata or estoppel is lost sight of, in some cases particularly because the judgment of the High Court dismissing the plea for want of maintainability is a voluminous one, giving the impression that the Court has decided the case on its merits. A very meritorious case is thus lost solely because the litigant had an 'alternative remedy' which he had not exhausted before he approached the High Court! Most of the lawyers would advise the litigant to invoke Article 226 because it is a common practice to file writ petitions involving the determination of disputed questions of fact. Invariably, in all cases, a suit will lie and where a suit will not lie, an action will lie before the tribunal/forum created in substitution of the Civil Court. A situation where instead of a writ, no suit will lie or an action will not lie in a tribunal/forum created in substitution of the Civil Court does not exist. Yet, sometimes even litigants insist that a writ be filed instead of instituting a suit or appropriate proceedings in the tribunal or forum created in substitution of the Civil Court. They do so because they are told that the sky is the limit of the jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 226 and that the long arm of justice will reach out to remove injustice wherever it is. But the reality is different. Most often, the judges on their own dismiss petitions in limine, namely, without issuing notice to the opposite party, on the ground of non-exhaustion of 'alternative remedy'. In other cases it is dismissed when the opposite party enters appearance and raises the plea of non-exhaustion of the alternate remedy. Sometimes an additional plea that no writ will lie because the Respondent is not a state or its instrumentality is raised. In short, justice is denied because the litigant had approached the wrong forum, taking us back to the pre-1875 where a common law court would decline injunction, specific performance, etc. because such remedy could be sought in the Chancery court and where a Court of Equity would deny damages, because such remedies would lie only in the common law courts. As I said before, it is difficult to imagine of cases where there does not exist an alternate forum, often termed as remedy, though incorrectly. And therefore, whether to admit a writ petition or grant relief, inspite of the existence of an "alternative remedy" falls under the province of the discretion of the judge. I am afraid to say, except in cases where the litigants are represented by lawyers who enjoy great 'face value', writ petitions are dismissed. I would say mercilessly, on the ground that the party has an "equally efficacious alternative remedy", and sometimes that the Respondent is not a state or instrumentality of the state and therefore, no writ will lie. The net outcome is that, except in a few cases where the writ petitions are entertained and relief is granted, in majority of cases, at least in the major high courts, which face a great influx of petitions, the litigant who had approached the court placing unstinted faith in it, is denied justice. This denial of justice to individual litigants remains to be their personal grief, because unlike governmental decisions which affect the public at large, where any injustice would lead to protest, the injustice at the hands of the judiciary remains to be the sorrow of individual litigants. Article 226 has unwittingly become an instrument of denial of justice. I do not know how many lawyers and judges would have noticed this unfortunate truth, the fallout of the concept that the jurisdiction under Article 226 is discretionary and that the existence of an efficacious alternative remedy would justify denying the jurisdiction. The terms 'forum' and 'remedies' are well defined in law. Forum means the court or tribunal where a party aggrieved could seek justice and enforce the remedies the law will provide him where his rights are infringed. The word 'remedy' in jurisprudence would mean common law, equitable and declaratory remedies. I have gone through a large number of the judgements from the 1950s till date, which in categorical terms declare that the jurisdiction under Article 226 is equitable and discretionary, and that the existence of an efficacious alternative remedy would be a ground for declining the jurisdiction. Invariably, all, even the most eminent of judges, have used the terminology "alternative remedy", while what they have meant is an alternative forum, a civil court or a tribunal, where the writ petitioner could have instituted a suit or initiated an action. The question then is, how the eminent judges could all use a wrong terminology, ie. alternative remedy, instead of alternative forum. To understand why the eminent judges so erred and the calamitous consequence of this error, one needs to trace the English legal history.

The Chancery jurisdiction, nay the Chancery Court came into existence as a parallel system of administration of justice, particularly since the 16th century, because the common law courts were too bound by precedents and procedures, leading to people complaining to the King, the fountain of justice. Initially the king personally heard their grievances and interfered with the decrees of the common law courts. The king himself deciding was disapproved. Chief Justice Coke, quoting Bracton, asserted that the King is under no man, but under God and the law. In the turf war between the common law courts and the chancery courts, the later gained predominance. It was said that the Chancellor shall not know the common law, and was not bound by its procedures. The Chancellor was often a bishop who decided based on the concepts of justice, equity and good conscience. The Chancellor gave reliefs like injunction, specific performance, set off, counter claim, etc. It's procedures were simple, no specific relief was even required to be sought. The Chancellor could mould the reliefs. The two streams of justice administration ran parallel without its waters ever getting mixed. Parliamentarians/reformers like Bentham believed that two systems of courts is counter productive and would lead to injustice and delay. As a result of their efforts, the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854 and the Chancery Amendment Act of 1958 were enacted and as a result thereof, the court of equity could grant the remedies which common law courts alone could have granted and vice versa.

The Judicature Acts of 1873-5 brought an end to the dual system. Thereafter, there remained only one stream of administration of justice which could grant all remedies, common law, equitable and declaratory. Even before the two systems were fused into one in England, by virtue of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859, one single system of administration of justice came to be introduced for the dominion of India. However, there was an aberration.

The Supreme Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay were established in the years 1774, 1800 and 1823, respectively. The Supreme Courts were vested of jurisdiction akin to the King's bench in England, namely, empowered to issue various writs like certiorari, quo warranto, etc. In England, the High Courts, namely, the Chancery courts, Kings bench, etc. vested of civil jurisdiction, capable of granting common law, equitable and declaratory remedies was established only in 1875 by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875. However, in India, with the enactment of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859, the Civil Courts came to be vested of the jurisdiction to grant common law, equitable and declaratory remedies, all. In 1861, the High Courts Act was enacted, and with it, the three Supreme Courts ceased to be in existence. The High Court Act did not confer any writ jurisdiction on the High Courts so established. By virtue of Section 491 of the CrPC of 1898, the High Courts could issue a writ of habeas corpus, I must clarify.

The High Courts of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras continued to exercise the writ jurisdiction within the presidency towns of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras because by virtue of the charter by which they were established, they were exercising writ jurisdiction within the presidency towns, being vested of the very same jurisdiction of the Kings bench (where the King was symbolically present). In short, prior to independence, while the High Courts of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras exercised the writ jurisdiction, other High Courts did not, except the writ of habeas corpus for which they were specifically empowered. There was really no need for the High Courts expressly being vested of the writ jurisdiction, because under the CPC, as civil courts of original jurisdiction, the High Courts had all the power to grant all remedies, common law, equitable and declaratory which certainly would include the power to issue writs. However, the High Courts established under the High Courts Act of 1861 did not exercise any writ jurisdiction, going by the nomenclature. But in reality the High Courts and the Civil Courts subordinate to it, within the framework of the CPC, indeed did grant all remedies. But the writ jurisdiction exercised by the three said High Courts was extremely popular, inspite of the limitation that the Madras HC cannot issue a writ to Madurai or Bombay HC beyond Bombay Islands. When the constitution was framed, it was therefore felt desirable to confer the writ jurisdiction on all High Courts and the Supreme Court, and like the Kings bench having jurisdiction all over England, to the Supreme Court. Article 32 and 226 was thus incorporated. However, nobody ever realized that to enact Articles 226 and 32 would mean to reintroduce the dual stream of justice which was abolished by the Judicature Act of 1875 in England, it having been found to be counter-productive. Nobody then, ever thought that it would lead to forum shopping, in as much as that it is open to a litigant, to decide for himself, whether to institute a suit, often in a subordinate Civil Court, or to institute a writ in the High Court, or that a wealthy litigant would engage a lawyer who manifestly commands greater 'face value'. The founding father's cannot be blamed for that, for it is humanly impossible to foresee everything about the future.

Before the Judicature Act of 1875, the words remedy and forum had no distinct meaning. Because the remedy, for instance, of injunction or certiorari or mandamus, cannot be granted by the common law courts. The litigant would plead before the Chancellor that he has no efficacious alternative remedy, for say, injunction or specific performance, because he cannot plead so in the common law court. That is why he was required to plead, where he seeks a writ before the Chancery court, that he has no alternative remedy.

The situation today, with the enactment of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 and its substitution by the Code of 1903, the Civil Court has all the powers to grant the common law, equitable and declaratory remedies, including to declare an Act of Parliament as unconstitutional, unless barred. There was no need for Article 226 or even Article 32. The fact that the incorporation of Articles 226 and 32 would amount to the reintroduction of two streams of justice, here a Civil Court of plenary jurisdiction, empowered to adjudicate any questions of fact and law, which also provides for adequate mechanism for correction of error was completely lost sight of.

Our justice delivery system is at dire straits. Article 226, so far as the common litigant is concerned, often means denial of justice at the very threshold itself. It is only apposite to quote the latin maxim, optimum esse legem, quae minimum reinquit arbitrio iudicis; id quod certitudo ejus praestat, namely that the best legal system is the one which gives least discretion to the judge and the best judge is the one who exercises his discretion the least. Article 226 which leaves everything to the discretion of the judge, whether even to entertain a plea, has become a synonym for denial of justice.

Rest of the winter in Odisha to see warmer nights, colder days

BHUBANESWAR: Rest of the winter is likely to see warmer nights and colder days in Odisha. That's what the India Meteorological Department's (IMD) seasonal outlook for December, January and February says. There is 35-45 per cent probability that minimum (night) temperature will be above normal during the three months. Similar is probability for maximum (day) temperature to reper cent probability that Odisha will receive above normal rainfall in December. The State has already recorded above normal rainfall between December 2 and 9. It received 26.9 mm rainfall in last eight days against the normal of 1.4 mm during the same period. "Currently, the interactions of warm and moist easterly winds with cool and dry northwesterly winds have led to overcast conditions in the State," Assistant Professor of School of Earth Ocean and Climate Sciences, IIT-Bhubaneswar Dr Sandeep Pattnaik told The New Indian Express.

The prevailing La Nina conditions in the Pacific Ocean have led to frequent rain-bearing weather systems impacting the southern India regions and creating sustained cloudiness and showers over Odisha. Overcast conditions lead to rise in night time temperature and fall in daytime temperature, he added.

main below normal during the three month period.

The IMD said, currently the sea surface temperature and atmospheric conditions over equatorial Pacific Ocean indicate weak La Nina conditions.

The conditions which cause frigid winters in the country are likely to strengthen and peak to moderate conditions during this winter season up to February.

However, rainfall activity is expected this month which will lead to a rise in night temperature and fall in day temperature, said weather experts. IMD has said there is 35-45 tems impacting the southern India regions and creating sustained cloudiness and showers over Odisha. Overcast conditions lead to rise in night time temperature and fall in daytime temperature, he added.

The World Meteorological Organisation (WMO) had stated a few days back that La Nina which has developed for the second consecutive year will impact rainfall and temperatures across the globe.

Despite the cooling influence of La Nina, many parts of the world are expected to be warmer than average because of climate change.

Mahanadi inflow to Odisha drops as Chhattisgarh sets up 516 barrages

BHUBANESWAR: Inflow of water into the Odisha part of the Mahanadi has reduced considerably over the last three dewater inflow reduced by 37 pc. Following this, inflow of water into Hirakud dam has significantly dropped.

After that, there was a drastic reduction in water inflow because of construction of a large number of barrages by the Chhattisgarh government. While water inflow reduced by 65 pc in 2016-17, it was 61 pc in 2017-18 and 57 pc in 2018-19.

The Minister said that the State government has taken several steps to resolve the longstanding water dispute between the two neighbouring states. A statutory complaint was filed before the Centre in 2016 under the Inter-State River Water Disputes Act-1956. The original suit was filed in the Supreme Court. As per the Centre's notification issued on March 12, 2018, Odisha has been placing its demand before Mahanadi Water Disputes Tribunal on different occasions. In the Tribunal, states like Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Jharkhand, Odisha and Chhattisgarh have been made parties.

Properties of Nature-based Solutions Help in Improving Mental Health during Covid 19 Pandemic among Urban Residents of India Proves a Study

Kolkata (KCN): Non-pharmaceutical interventions like stay-at-home orders, cancellations of events, work from home, etc. were the first line of defence to combat the spread of highly transmissible infection Covid-19. But these interventions created whole new situations that urban residents needed to cope with, which, many often created mental distress, especially during the lockdown period, when people lived in utter uncertainty- one hand there were severe life losses, on the other hand the economic instabilities. In such a situation, a study was conducted by Dr Shalini Dhyani, Senior Scientist, CSIR-National Environmental Engineering Research Institute (NEERI) along with Mrittika Basu, Scientist, Laboratory of Sustainable Rural Development, Graduate School for Global Environmental Studies, Kyoto University, Kyoto, Japan, Dr Rajarshi Dasgupta & Dr Pankaj Kumar, Senior Policy Researchers, Institute for Global Environmental Strategies. The study revealed that properties of nature-based solutions in the form of home gardens with increasing time spent from less than 10 min to more than 2 h, there, decreased the score of stress and anxiety and overall Depression, Anxiety and Stress Scale (DASS)-21 in an individual. Covid-19 is unique due to the extent, magnitude, and rapidity of its spread. In addition to the direct health impacts, there are enormous collateral damages caused by the responses to combat the pandemic like the closure of schools, workplaces, public and private entertainment spaces like parks, cinemas, theatres, restaurants, shopping malls, etc, restricted socialization and restrictions on travel. One of the most critical 'collateral damage' is the impact on the mental health of not only the health and frontline workers but also for the vulnerable population like elderly people and individuals suffering from chronic illness and the general population who must undergo significant changes in their lifestyle to cope with the 'new normal'. Mental health impacts of COVID-19 have already gained widespread attention in the academic arena with experts highlighting the urgency and need for proper intervention measures. In addition, dense urban areas, both megapolises like Kolkata and secondary cities, are found to be infection hotspots.

The Initial studies on the impact of Covid-19 on the public reported widespread psychological distress including anxiety, loneliness, depression, and financial concerns. The threat of losing jobs, financial worries, work from home pressures, physical and social distancing created loneliness among the individuals which also contributed to the mental unhappiness. Previous studies on mental health emphasized the importance of access to green space in relieving stress and anxiety, and uplifting mood and positive thoughts. However, depending on the situation of the pandemic in different countries, different levels of lockdown are enforced and access to outer green spaces like parks, playgrounds or community grounds has been moderately or strictly restricted. The immediate greenness around a home is also reported to improve human health and a home garden provides this greenness and appears to also be beneficial. There is increasing evidence that horticultural therapy including gardening, provided substantial human health benefits like reductions in depression, anxiety, and body mass index, as well as increased in life satisfaction, quality of life, and sense of community. Availability of home gardens provided an opportunity to relax and unwind with access to sunshine and fresh air which has several reported health benefits including sleeping patterns and mood enhancement. Home gardens produced aesthetic, spiritual and different health benefits also including physical and mental health benefits. The physical exercise carried out while gardening activities like watering, weeding, pruning, etc. are valuable from the point of physical health while mental health benefits like aiding in recovery, stress reduction, and cognitive functioning are well-reported.

The study suggested that urban households with home gardens or terrace gardens faced comparatively lesser mental distress during the enforcement of stay-at-home orders than households with no home gardens. Time spent on gardens was reported to influence emotional outcomes like anxiety, anger, sadness, contentment, etc, and other dementia-related behaviour like aggression. The questionnaire survey was administered online through Survey Monkey® for two weeks at the end of May 2020. The survey comprised 19 questions divided into three sections (Supplementary material). To collect as many responses as possible across different cities in India, the survey was administered in English.

The study, conducted with urban residents from different cities in India, including Kolkata showed that home gardens negatively moderated the positive relationship between the number of days at home and mental distress. This signified the role of home gardens in lowering the Covid-19 induced mental distress. Though the composition of home gardens did not have any significant impact on the association, active interactions through working in home gardens significantly moderated the relationship between mental distress (except depression) and the number of days confined at home due to the enforcement of stay-at-home orders.

mortgage lender Better.com has apologised for the way he handled layoffs at the company after a video of him firing 900 people last week in a three-minute long Zoom call went viral on social media. "I realise that the way I communicated this news made a difficult situation worse," Garg said in a letter.

sonnel have been injured due to stone pelting and three of them were admitted to Capital Hospital for treatment. Action will be taken against those who were involved in the attack on police personnel on duty as per the law," Commissioner of Police, S K Priyadarshi told reporters after visiting the injured policemen in hospital.

BJP state president, Samir Mohanty criticised the police for its "brutality" against the party's youth wing activists.

He alleged that the police baton charged peaceful demonstrators who were demanding sacking of Minister of State for Home D S Mishra and handing over the lady teacher murder case to CBI.

Acharya claimed that many party activists have sustained injuries and were being treated in different hospitals.

Mohanty too visited Capital hospital and enquired about the health conditions of the party activists under treatment there.

"The fight will not end. We need justice. The holy land of Lord Jagannath will never tolerate the criminal mindset of this BJD govt. CM has to take action against the criminal minister @DSMishraKLD & @jenapratap66," the BJP Odisha said in an official twitter post.

While Mishra is alleged to have a close relation with the prime accused in the murder of the lady teacher, Law Minister Pratap Jena's name had figured among the 13 accused persons in the FIR lodged in the murder of two BJP leaders at Mahanga in Cuttack district in January this year.

The ruling BJD also hit the streets here on Thursday against the Centre over the rise in prices of fuel and other essential commodities.

The party activists took out a motorcycle rally which disrupted vehicular movement.

BJD also blamed the BJP-led government at the Centre for rise in unemployment.

The Centre has betrayed the people by making false promises and they are now facing difficulties due to the rise in the prices of essential commodities amidst the COVID-19 pandemic, BJD MLA Snehangini Chhuria said.

employee. Garg came under criticism across the world for the way he communicated the layoff decision to the 900 employees just ahead of the holiday season.

The sacked employees, mainly in the US and India, comprised about 9% of the digital mortgage lender. TechCrunch speculated that the lay-offs may have been a condition for Better.com's backers — which include SoftBank — greenlighting a sooner-than-expected cash infusion of $750 million. Several Indian CEOs also expressed shock and criticised the lay-off incident on social media.

Founded in 2016 and headquartered in New York, Better.com offers mortgage and insurance products to homeowners through its online platform.

Nationwide 'silent strike' in Myanmar protests military rule

founder and spokesperson of the Alliance of Student Unions Yangon, said the strike by itself might not make a significant difference.

"But by showing their unity, the strike is a success for the people who are waging psychological warfare against the military dictatorship," he said.

Solidarity appeared strong among operators of even the smallest shops in Yangon, but at least a few apparently paid a price for their defiance, as photos posted on social media showed fittings such as tables and chairs confiscated by security forces from some.

Since Thursday, authorities had announced in some neighborhoods that action would be taken against shops which close without an acceptable reason.

A shopkeeper from the market in Muse in northern Shan state said the official Township Development Committee threatened over a loudspeaker on Friday morning that it would take action against closed shops.

"They announced in the town that they would shut down our shops for a month if we went ahead and closed the shops and markets without any reason. But we don't care. It is the time to show our unity," said the vendor, who asked to remain anonymous for fear of retribution from the authorities.

Protesters wearing black attire, as suggested by strike organizers, marched silently in Shwedo in Sagaing region. People at home, also dressed in black, posted selfies showing them holding small handmade posters.

"We own our town. Our city, our rules. Staying silent or active is our choice. Never be allowed to rule," was written on one. "Take back our human rights by revolution," read another.

People also held up three fingers, the resistance salute adopted from "The Hunger Games" movie series.

There was at least one pro-military march in Yangon, according to photos on social media that showed about 100 demonstrators holding small flags and posters reading "Counter-Terrorism and Support the Military."

SUM Conducts Rare Brain Surgery

Prof. (Dr.) Mahapatra said the patient was experiencing frequent hiccups and trembling besides abnormal body movements affecting his face, tongue, abdomen and thigh with the frequency of more than 30 per minute. He was unable to eat, sleep or stand. He could not get any relief after being treated in several hospitals within the state and outside.

When he came to IMS and SUM Hospital, the case was immediately diagnosed to be a case of Myoclonic Epilepsy by Senior Neurologist Dr. Surjyaprakash S. Choudhury and treatment was started. Further investigation revealed that Mahanandia had a tumour deep inside the brain (Brainstem Cavernoma) which was a rare condition and it required surgery which was too complicated and risky.

However, a team led by Neurosurgeon Dr. Atmaranjan Das conducted the seven hour long surgery on November 26 to successfully remove the tumour, he said.

According to research publications, this surgery was the seventh such case in the world and first in India. Surgery was not attempted anywhere in the country for addressing such cases before, Dr. Das said.

"It was a surgeon's intuition that led me to take up the surgery. It was extremely challenging but our team was willing to take the risk," he said adding "we opted for brain mapping—3D modeling technique used to visually represent nerve tracts using data collected by diffusion MRI and it worked."

Just a day after surgery, the patient was absolutely free from hiccups and was able to walk which could be said to be a miracle in medical science. "He not only got a new life, but was able to eat and sleep properly. In fact, he walked out of the hospital when discharged," Dr. Das said.

Mahanandia's family members were thankful to Dr. Das, Dr. Choudhury and the team comprising Dr. Iswar Behera, Dr. Sudeep Mohapatra, Dr. Sumirini, Dr. Abhijit Acharya, Dr. Ranjita Acharya, Dr. Sumita Swain, Dr. Jeeban Pratik Khatua, nurses and medical staff of the hospital.

This has demonstrated that Odisha is not behind the rest of the world in taking up such difficult surgeries and IMS and SUM Hospital now matches international standards where all advanced equipment and technology is available, Dr. Choudhury said.

This case would now be published in various national and international medical journals. The expensive surgery was conducted free of any cost as the patient was covered under the state government's Biju Swasthya Kalyan Yojana scheme. Dr. Srikanta Kumar Sahu, Head of the department of Neurology, was present at the press conference.

Seven Omicron cases among 695 fresh COVID-19 infections reported in Maharashtra, 12 deaths recorded

Omicron cases have been reported in Maharashtra -- three in Mumbai and four in Pimpri Chinchwad Municipal Corporation in Pune district. "Due to this, the total of Omicron positive cases in the state increased to 17," it added.

The statement said that the three new patients from Mumbai were all male, aged 48, 25 and 37 years with recent history of travel to Tanzania, UK and South Africa-Nairobi, respectively. Four new patients from PCMC limits are contacts of a Nigerian woman who was earlier confirmed as an Omicron case.

The release said that of the seven new Omicron patients, four were fully vaccinated and one had received a single dose of the coronavirus vaccine. One adult patient was not vaccinated, while another is a three-and-half-year-old child and thus not eligible for inoculation.

Four of the new patients are asymptomatic while three have only mild symptoms, the official release said. Meanwhile, 11 districts and five civic bodies in Maharashtra did not report any new COVID-19 case in the last 24 hours.

The Mumbai division, which comprises the city and satellite townships, reported 327 cases and five deaths. The Pune division reported 214 new cases, Nashik division 68, Kolhapur 16, Akola four, Nagpur 10, Latur 33 and the Aurangabad division 23 new cases.

There will be a preparatory camp in Bengaluru ahead of the tournament and the governing body also named a 25-member squad for the same, which includes five standby players. "The selectors have also announced a 25-member squad for a preparatory camp at the National Cricket Academy in Bengaluru from December 11th-19th ahead of the ACC event." PARIS: Former women's number one Amelie Mauresmo was on Thursday named director of the French Open, replacing Guy Forget. Mauresmo will be in place until at least 2024, French tennis federation president Gilles Moretton said. A two-time Grand Slam winner (Australian Open and Wimbledon in 2006) and 2004 Olympic singles silver medalist in Athens, the 42-year-old Mauresmo expressed her "pride" at being named director of Roland Garros, the premier claycourt tournament in the world and federation's principal source of revenue.

Forget, who'd been in place since 2016 and also overseen the Paris Masters since 2012, was nearing the end of his contract but turned down potential offers, according to Moretton.

Empowering Babar Azam, instilling fearless approach brought positive outlook: PCB chairman Ramiz Raja

LAHORE: PCB chairman Ramiz Raja said empowering skipper Babar Azam and instilling a fearless approach has helped Pakistan cap off a successful two-month tour of the United Arab Emirates and Bangladesh. As I had said 'I want to fix Pakistan cricket's GPS', it meant empowering the captain and instilling fearless cricket, which is why you are seeing a positive change in the team's outlook." The loss in the nine T20Is was against Australia in the semi-finals of the T20 World Cup, while wins in the two Tests saw Pakistan gain 24 crucial ICC World Test Championship points. "The Pakistan team has displayed wonderful cricket in Bangladesh, and I want to congratulate them for that," Raja said. "In terms of cricket, good and everyone is playing for Pakistan in this side." Raja said Pakistan is becoming more consistent. "This is what Pakistan's cricket is; they create drama, they have unlimited potential, but they only lack consistency. But, now, we are seeing them becoming consistent...We have strong and challenging series coming up. "I welcome West Indies to Pakistan, we have great form in T20Is, and are a mid-tier team in the ODIs as we are ranked fifth. As a mid-tier team, you can do a lot of experimentation. And after the HBL PSL, we have Australia coming."

Bangladesh is a tough destination, because they curate pitches on which they nullify and neutralise big sides. They have firm grip on the spin department and they also play it very well. "We must appreciate Pakistan for not losing the focus after the T20 World Cup and for their swift shift from the T20 to Test format. In the end, the results were outstanding. The dressing room atmosphere is

potential, but they only lack consistency. But, now, we are seeing them becoming consistent...We have strong and challenging series coming up. ## Women's football in India is rising: IM Vijayan

KOZHIKODE: The national women team's ascendancy was on display during the recent exposure tour of Brazil, said Indian football legend IM Vijayan, who believes that adding competition between players will further help in the growth of the game in the country. India had played against Brazil, Chile and Venezuela in a four-nation tournament as part of its preparation for the AFC Asian Cup to be held in India -- Mumbai and Pune--from January 20 to February 6. While India lost all their three matches but the highlight of the tour was the one-goal that they scored against mighty Brazil, who are the 2007 World Cup runners-up. "The way India played against Brazil was impressive. We scored a goal against the top team globally which shows that women's football in India is rising," the 52-year-old Vijayan, a former India men's team captain, said in a release issued by

AIFF. "Our team has improved a lot and the federation is also trying hard to give them the much needed exposures." "India is hosting the Asian Cup next year and everyone is trying hard to build the team
